Read the following passage, then choose the correct answer from a, b, c or d:

Sleep is one of the body's most essential functions, yet it remains one of the least understood. For centuries, scientists believed that sleep was simply a passive state of rest. However, recent research has revealed that while the body may appear still, the brain is surprisingly active. During sleep, it processes memories, regulates hormones, and repairs tissues- all critical functions for mental and physical health.

The human sleep cycle is divided into several stages, including light sleep, deep sleep, and REM (Rapid Eye Movement) sleep. Each stage plays a unique role: deep sleep helps the body recover physically, while REM sleep supports learning and emotional balance. People who lack enough REM sleep often struggle with focus, mood swings, and poor memory.

During our lifetime, we probably spend 25 years or more sleeping. But why? What is the purpose of sleep? Some scientists think we sleep in order to replenish brain cells. Other scientists think that sleep helps the body to grow and to relieve stress.

Technology, stress, and modern lifestyles have significantly disrupted natural sleep patterns. Blue light from screens delays the release of melatonin — the hormone responsible for making us sleepy. Scientists recommend turning off electronic devices at least one hour before bed and maintaining a consistent bedtime routine. Sleep is not a luxury; it's a biological necessity. Understanding its complexity allows us to appreciate that a good night's sleep is as vital as proper nutrition or exercise.

It was a cold January morning when Maya stood at the edge of the old bridge, staring at the river below. She had returned to her hometown after ten long years. She was doing her post graduate studies in London. Everything looked smaller now—the trees, the houses, even the bridge where she and her best friend, Hana, used to spend hours talking about their dreams. But Hana was gone. The accident had taken her life a week after Maya left for college.

Maya had never forgiven herself for not being there. She had thrown herself into work, pretending that success could fill the empty space inside her. Yet, every achievement reminded her of the promise she'd broken—to come back and visit Hana before winter.

As she walked across the bridge, she felt the wind brush against her face, carrying the faint scent of pine trees. For the first time in years, she didn't rush. She stopped in the middle, closed her eyes, and whispered, "I'm sorry."

Suddenly, a soft drizzle began to fall. Maya smiled through her tears. It was as if the town itself was forgiving her, washing away the guilt she had carried for so long. She realized she couldn't change the past, but she could honor Hana's memory by living fully again.
